

Cultural diversity and the NDIS

Making it work for my business

Opportunities for growth

By 2019, more than 90,000 Queenslanders with disability are expected to access the NDIS (National Disability Insurance Scheme), creating up to 19,400 additional jobs.

People with a disability from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds do not currently access support services at the expected rate.

This is an incredible opportunity for Queensland businesses to deliver supports participants want and need in a new, consumer-driven market.

Why focus on cultural diversity?

Queensland is a richly diverse, multicultural society.

Over 20% of our population are born overseas and of these, nearly half are born in countries where English is not the main language.

Further, 34% of Queensland's population growth is driven by overseas entrants.

A culturally diverse workforce means the ability to respond to customers' disability support needs AND service delivery preferences suited to their cultural, language &/or religious backgrounds.

What's in it for my business?

In a competitive market, it makes good business sense to cater to diverse client groups. Findings from NDIS trial sites confirm that there will be demand for workers from a variety of backgrounds, reflecting the diversity of clients.

Business benefits include:

- ✓ attract and retain clients through culturally appropriate and responsive services
- ✓ improve trust and communication resulting in client satisfaction and better outcomes
- ✓ gain entry into new markets and improve connections with culturally diverse communities
- ✓ foster innovation and productivity by cultivating new perspectives and ideas
- ✓ attract the best staff and broaden the recruitment talent pool
- ✓ improve staff satisfaction and retention through valuing and promoting diversity in the workplace
- ✓ strengthen your reputation as a socially responsible organisation

A culturally diverse workforce with valuable language skills and cultural knowledge can help create more marketable customer experiences, products and services.
